TUESDAY, JUNE 14, 1881.

SOUTH CAROLINA is on the high road to reform. The papers down there come out with display headlines when a man makes an honest return to the tax gatherer of his personal effects.

THE NEW YORK Tribune says that Senator Conkling "had no right to resign." Perhaps not; but why do you discourage the delusion? It was one of those cases where the end justifies the means.

ACCORDING to our telegrams from Concord there seems to be another case of the prevailing epidemic of "Republican harmony" in New Hampshire. All the factions up there appear to have caught the infection of the "era of good feeling."

THE NEW YORK Commercial Advertiser, Conkling-and-Platt organ, refers to the organs of the Administration as "The mendacious Tribune, the feeble Times and the caution Evening Post," denounces their shameless contumacious of the Sessions bribery, and calls them "Apologists of Crime!" "All the factions" are being rapidly "harmonized."

OUR ESTEEMED COTEMPORARY, the World, notes that the Republican Governor of New Hampshire has been urging the Legislature to take steps to stamp out bribery in the Granite State, remarking in plain language: "The improper use of money to influence popular elections is a crying evil of our times. It has become so general that little or no secrecy is made of it and that well-meaning men assume to justify it." (Laughter.)

MR. BRADLEY, the stalwart hero in the Albany Legislature, who made a dramatic display of his parity in that little matter of $2,000, was asked yesterday whether he had heard of any other cases of legislative bribery. He said that his wife used to read him about some in English history during Fox's time. From this we infer that the Pomeroy incident in the Kansas Legislature, occurred during Mr. Bradley's residence at the Binghampton Asylum. He should send for back files.

WHATSOEVER may be the nature of the harmony that prevails in political organizations, there can be no doubt of the existence of a genuine era of good feeling in Washington journalism. The Critic returns its profound acknowledgments to its esteemed contemporaries, the Star, Post, Republican and the German Volks Tribune, for the kindly and polite greeting to its new management, in which they all joined. We shall endeavor to simulate their courtesy in all things.

THE RASCALITIES which, according to recent developments at Washington and Albany, the Republicans practice upon each other in a political way, afford some basis for estimating how grossly and by what devices of corruption they cheated the Democrats in 1876 and 1880. [New York World.]

The Democratic party has simply been making a virtue of necessity. First Sam Tilden in 1876 and then Bill Barnum in 1880 tried to beat the Republicans at their own game, and both failed. By and by the Democrats will learn that shrewd cheating can beat stupid cheating any day, and then will either try to improve their style of cheating to the point of successful competition or abandon it altogether. For our own part we advise the Democrats to give it up and try the honest dodge. The Republicans are too old hands at the cheating business for amateurs to compete with.

IT IS POSSIBLE THAT the great question whether Sessions bought Bradley and Bradley went back on the delivery of the goods, may never be decided. But the fact that the two republican factions in New York have got at that kind of work in their efforts to destroy each other is not encouraging in the direction of "harmony."

If our memory serves us, it is not so very long since we heard that "all the factions were to be harmonized," and that this Administration was to sail majestically upon the placid bosom of an "era of good feeling." Do we understand the existing situation to fill the bill of a "placid bosom"? How do the books of "harmony" balance at the end of the first quarter?

INDIANA seems to be again enjoying a boom. She possesses one Samuel Elliot, a five-year-old convict from Wayne county, who came (like every other man of distinction) from Ohio, and who has just left the prison with an ingenious machine which he calls perpetual motion. It is termed a ball motion, consisting of eight balls, balls moving over inclined planes, striking four levers, each eight inches high, fixed upon a horizontal wheel. The balls, after striking the levers, drop down and are carried up on a hollow screw. The machine worked well in the prison. Indiana should not be premature in her rejoicings. The machine, like Elliot, may work better on the inside of a jail than when it gets out.

THE Washington correspondent of the Boston Post says:
One of the reasons why the Census Bureau is short of funds has not been publicly announced. The amount of blank forms and circulars and tabular statements which it has been necessary to have printed are enormous. This printing has been done by the Government establishment, which is an extravagant and corrupt concern as ever existed in the District of Columbia. It isn't at all surprising that Gen. Walker should estimate that if he had had his printing done under contract with private parties he could have already saved at least $60,000.

The General is no doubt perfectly correct in this. The Government generally manages to pay more for what it gets, whether in the shape of brains or property, than any business concern in the country. It is always the case, too, not only with the Census, but with every other bureau of the Departments, that bulletins of very small interest, and generally consigned to the waste basket, are distributed by the thousands. This leak might be stopped with the aid of judicious discrimination. This item of $60,000, however, is a mere bagatelle, and very slightly accounts for the expenditure over and above Gen. Walker's estimate.

THE INTIMATION has been made in several quarters that THE CRITIC, under its new management, was to become the defender and apologist of certain public officials, alleged to be implicated in some pending prosecutions, to wit, the investigation into the Star Route frauds. The reply we make to all this inspired chaff shall be brief and to the point. In the present aspect of affairs, we observe that a number of charges have been made in an irregular manner, and so far as can be ascertained, upon irresponsible authority against a body of men lately entrusted with large power and the performance of high official functions. We believe it is usual, in even the jury trial of a murderer, to proceed, by due process of law, in shaping conviction or acquittal to some extent by the development of testimony, and have never believed in the summary method of hanging the man first and then resorting to a trial.

If we are wrong in that view of the case, it is some satisfaction to feel assured that the sentiment of all civilized communities from an early period has been to the same purport. In dealing with gentlemen, who have heretofore borne characters good enough to entitle them to the administration of prominent trusts, in a great government like ours, it is at least their due when suspicion raises its head, to enjoy the same decency of procedure and legal decorum always accorded to the lowest felons on the calendar.

In case it should appear, after a fair and impartial hearing before a legally constituted tribunal, that any or all of the gentlemen now assailed in the press and by rumor have been guilty of malfeasance in office, THE CRITIC will be found second to none in its zeal for the administration of justice. But to impose fines, to mete out criminal punishment, and to settle a term of years for imprisonment, before the above usual formalities have been gone through with, is neither journalism nor common sense, and we propose to introduce both, as much as possible, into the conduct of this paper. We believe that all fair-minded people who still retain respect for the civilized rules of jurisprudence, will cheerfully subscribe to this declaration of principles. Up to the present moment the men who are engineering this job of snap judgment are not entitled, either by their own reputations or by the character of their methods, to the respect of law-abiding citizens. They are mainly individuals whose careers have been tainted with professional libel, subornation of perjury and blackmail, in some cases self-confessed, and in all cases clearly subject to suspicion.

They began the prosecution in the press on the strength of unsifted and unsubstantiated assertions. They are still carrying it on in close corporation style. Those representing the newspaper side of the prosecution are allowed access to every fresh rumor or suspicion, given entire control of documents supposedly reserved for the court room, while the duly selected attorneys for the defense are denied not only such privileges, but even decent recognition. We deny the right to dignify such ex parte and star-chamber proceedings with the name of proof. We propose to frame our views of the case according to proof when found.

It is true that in all large public prosecutions, where so many interests are involved, trial by newspaper is unavoidable to some extent. But the rule with those who have been in charge of these prosecutions, either on the bench or in Congress, has been to suppress, as much as might be, all testimony or rumor that gave but one coloring to the case in advance. Judicial procedure must be protected from these unjust assaults. But the clique having this Star Route business in hand have not only not tried to observe this principle, but have thrown all their energies into the other extreme, intimating rumors and circulating through the press in an underground and disreputable way, such reports as affected but one side of the case and repressing every circumstance that could conflict with their prosecution by conveying an impression favorable for the defense. THE CRITIC will be an organ in the cause of common justice, and in behalf of all legal precedent against such high-handed measures. Our "organism" bears this offense—no more, no less.

WASHINGTON SOCIETY is just now seen under one of its most pleasant aspects. The crowded assembly, necessarily bound by stringent rules of cards, each and each compliments, have disappeared, and intimate friends, relieved of the heavy pressure of social requirements, now hasten to renew the pleasing and easy intercourse interrupted by the demands of the season. In the lovely gardens, beneath wide-spreading trees, charming reunions are held beneath the restful rays of the moon. The sweetest and quiet of these sylvan scenes could hardly be realized by the strangers who have only known Washington in the noise and whirl of its winter life. The simple and unostentatious costumes suited to summer, the wearers reclining upon the easy chairs, the dainty rugs spread beneath dainty slippers, the merry chat enjoyed as the luxury of a hard-earned leisure, with the mild moonlight sifting through the over-arching trees, compose a picture to be long remembered as one of the many phases of Washington life.

DIFFER AS PEOPLE will on questions of law, religion and politics, all must unite in the opinion that she does not get out of the country the sweet sum of feminine loquacity; it is a chosen and a sacred number that satisfies the female heart. Several sad instances have been just related by a sympathetic press of the sorrows of American ladies returning from European tours, who, by the reckless cruelty of the steamship companies, have been torn temporarily from their luggage. Fancy can paint a lady so sea-sick in her stateroom that she cannot hand out her checks, and harrowing as the scene may be, we are sustained by the thought that she does not care just at that moment where her packs are. But there is another and, if possible, a sadder scene to be imagined, when that same lady stands landed all safe and sound, ready primed with allusions to dear, delightful Paris, and is tortured by the need of that essential instrument of genuine loquacity, the scissors, found in the scissors of that mighty man milliner.

THE National Fair Association has decided that the fall meeting and fair in October shall continue from the 18th to the 28th. The running races, for which liberal purses will be offered, are to be the finest ever conducted here. At last night's meeting it was decided to begin preparations at once for the coming event, and that expense should be the least consideration.
